

Saltwater Coast Community Hub is on its way

Saltwater Coast residents will have noticed the early stages of construction commence in October last year on the long-awaited development of the Saltwater Coast Promenade community hub.

Set for completion in 2016 the centre, which will cost $6.7 million, is being built by the Wyndham council and the state government, with the council spending $5.2 million on the project.

Saltwater Coast promenade will be a wonderful addition for both Saltwater Coast residents as well as the Point Cook community, with the building reported to include consulting rooms for maternal and child health services, intervention services meeting rooms, an amphitheatre and beautiful community gardens.

Children and Early Childhood Development Minister, Wendy Lovell, was quoted in the Wyndham Star Weekly saying this about the new centre:

“Bringing these services together is not only more convenient for families, it allows a child’s progress to be better monitored, ensuring any issues can be identified and addressed early on.”

We are certainly looking forward to seeing construction progress on the project over the coming months.
